THE HOME LAND.

I toll and I spin, but there's no one here to care;
Oh, the smell of the peat and the feel of Irish air,
The green of the woods and the river running through,
And the kind eyes, the true eyes, the eyes of Irish blue!

It's little he knew, when he begged me to stay,
That my heart it said, "Yes!" when my lips were telling "Nay!"
Oh, the gold of the sun as we stood alone, we two,
And the kind eyes, the true eyes, the eyes of Irish blue!

There's naught loves me here, but from far across the sea,
There's a green little valley that is calling still to me—
Just a patch of furze and woodland, with the river running through,
And the kind eyes, the true eyes, the eyes of Irish blue!

MARTHA HASKELL CLARK.

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY.
He who goes down into the battle of life giving a smile for every frown, a cheery word for every cross one, and lending a helping hand to the unfortunate, is after all, the best of missionaries.

By thine own soul's law learn to live,
And if men thwart thee, take no heed,
And if men hate thee, have no care;
Sing thou thy song and do thy deed,
Hope thou thy hope and pray thy prayer.

MRS. A. E. S. MCGUIRE IN EVANSTON, ILL.
Mrs. A. E. S. McGuire, of Harris, Fla., is in Evanston, Ill., this week, the guest of friends. She reports the weather extremely warm in the north and will be glad to get back to the delicious breezes on "The Narrows." She will return in about two weeks.

SUIT STYLES NOT TO CHANGE SO NOTICEABLY.

The woman who bought a good looking tailored suit late last season will have cause to congratulate herself upon the fact that the suit-styles have not changed so radically during the past six months, and that her suit, if reasonably plain, may slip through at least a part of another season.

The lines of the coats and the long separate wraps are to be about the same, the side-button effect to be extremely popular. The long coat will be indispensable with the separate one piece dresses, again.

THE AVERAGE WOMAN.

If your wages are even fair, my son—
Though the cost of living is high—
If you're in love, I tell you, my son,
I won't do to tarry too long, my son.
Just make up the mind of you,
For if you're in love and she loves you,
Why, the average woman will do.

If troubles care molest, my son,
And worry and fret draw near,
You'll find she will do her best, my son,
To drive them away with her cheer.
So, don't hesitate too long, my son—
Just take her and cherish her true.
For if you're in love and she loves you,
Why, the average woman will do.

THOSE FREAKY STYLES.

"Speaking of outlandish sights, which we weren't," observed Father, laying down a copy of a woman's fashion journal, "the styles the women are wearing nowadays are the limit."

"Indeed," exclaimed Mother. "Certainly. Why, an over-dressed, befeathered and beheaded Aztec squaw would look like a simple country girl alongside of 'em. Talk about your riot of color—the costume of a fashionably dressed woman of today has Joseph's much-famed jacket making love to the mat. Say, honest, a 75-cent Fouse Cafe isn't it. Why, the anti-noise society ought—"

"Pause," said Mother, "hesitate. Allow me to interpolate a word in defense of my sex. You men can thank yourselves for woman's present hectic garb. You've encouraged it. Should I go to the theatre with you looking like a faded little Sweet William in a garden of American Beauty roses, would your bosom swell with pride? I think not. Of course some women—"

"Ah," murmured Father, thinking to quell his spouse with this snappy rejoinder, "but why the superabundance of tone? Why the crash of cymbals—the Wagnerian interpretation of color? You can hear them cogging while they're yet in the off-ice, wherever that is. The wear and tear on the ear-drums is ruinous."

"You men should know," continued Mother, utterly ignoring friend Father's little sally, "that your wives are bulletin boards whereon you announce that wife has a new sixty dollar hat and you paid for it. Mr. Jones next door may not know that it cost $60, but be sure that Mrs. J. does. And J. is not long kept in ignorance of it. Ergo: you get an A1 alongside your name in Jones's mental credit book. Dunn's and Bradstreet's have nothing at all on us."

"Mother," said Father later on as he turned to the sport page, "wear that new rose-colored thing of yours at the Smith's tomorrow night; it's the best looking gown you've got. Looks like a million dollars."

Mother's smile was the last word.

Heart and Home Problems

By Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am nineteen and in love with a girl of twenty-five. I am as tall as my father and look fully as old as my girl. She says she will marry me but my parents are against it.

She is a good girl, but they say I am too young to marry. Now must I wait until I am twenty-one before I marry?

BOB.
You certainly must wait until you are twenty-one if you wish to marry without your parents' consent. Also, I think your parents are very wise. Bob, you should respect that wisdom. The girl may be all right in every way, though I question her judgment in being willing to marry a lad of your age. A girl of twenty-five ought to have more sense than that, and should wish for a man nearer her own age.

However, the sensible thing for you to do is to wait until you are twenty-one. Then, if you and the girl still think you love each other enough to marry, and you are able to support a wife, the marriage may be all right.

However, I doubt very much if you will be of the same mind two years hence, while the girl, in that time, will probably have found a more suitable match.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am fourteen years old and have two brothers, one younger and one older. My mother is dead and I have to take care of the house. I do all the housework and cooking and washing and I never have any fun like other girls.

When I say anything to my father, that he ought to make my brothers help, he says housework isn't boys' work and I must do the best I can. I had to stop school after my mother died. Don't you think I ought to get some education, Mrs. Thompson?

Isn't there any way you can tell me so I won't have to stay here all the time and do all the work?

MARIETTA.
Your burdens are too heavy, little girl. Your father certainly ought to see to it that you are not overtaxed. It would not be at all unmanly for your father to help you with the hardest work. Many splendid men have helped their wives with the housework, thinking it more dignified for a man to help his wife than it would be for him to let her become a worn-out drudge.

The right kind of a man wants his womenfolk to be healthy and happy. Your father has probably not thought about it that way and, perhaps, if you will show this to him, he will be only too glad to take steps to make your burden lighter. Perhaps he will have the laundry work sent out, or see that some strong woman comes to help you, if your brothers can't be induced to do it.

BEETHA.
A little girl of 14 ought to have some good times, and surely she ought to have at least a good common school education. I hope you may go back to school when the next term opens.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: My chum was engaged to a man and had a quarrel with him and broke the engagement. Because he is a friend of mine and I haven't turned him down, she won't speak to me. She says I am trying to steal him away, but I am not. I like another man a good deal better. Do you think I ought to turn down this man because my chum did, when he is a friend of mine and always has been? I don't want to lose my chum, either.

Calling Pa.
"Ma put over a good one on pa, all right, all right."

"He was putting up a shelf in the pantry and accidentally hit his thumb with the hammer. While he was dancing around, saying a lot of awful things, ma rushed into the kitchen and said: 'John, stop that language right away. Just remember you're not out at a baseball park now.'"
